

Poste Italiane is part of the steering group of ALICE (Alliance for Logistics Innovation through Collaboration in Europe), a European project launched in 2013 with the aim of improving the performance of large-scale retail distribution through the use of more efficient, competitive and sustainable organisational models.

The project is based on recognition of the need for a shared global vision of distribution chain logistics and planning. According to European Commission estimates, efficiency improvements of between 10% and 30% in this sector would result in industrial savings of between 100 and 300 billion Euros.

ALICE is one of the supporters of Horizon 2020, the EU programme set up to finance European technological research and development.
